

The funeral of Attila The Hun

In the spring of 453 the great leader of the tribe Hun, Attila, passed away on the night of his second wedding. His two sons, Csaba and Aladár had to decide how to bury this glorious leader, so they went to a shaman and asked him. The shaman told them to bury Attila under the light of the sun, the moon, and after that to bury him into darkness underground and water. So, the two princes had to think how to do all that and they came up with the solution of putting the leader's body into a three-layered casket made out of gold, silver and iron. Then they blocked off the beds of the river Tisza where the river split into two. There they buried the three layered casket into the soil of the dry river bed. Later they removed the blockade and let the river flow in its usual way. Then the workers were killed by henchmen and the henchmen were killed by the two princes.

And that is the story of the funeral of Attila The Hun.
